

McGill

How will you make our future?

Join a thriving community

The First Peoples House is the hub of Indigenous life on campus, offering services, facilities, programs and events to support student success.

Indigenous Student Orientation

Take part in fun activities and connect with student groups. Get to know your community at McGill. Join fellow students and staff for lunch at the First People's House.

University Housing

The transition from living at home to living in residences is a big step for many of our first year students. McGill's residences are a respectful and supportive environment that quickly becomes a home away from home for students. Residences provide a community within which students can flourish personally, socially and academically. McGill guarantees on-campus student housing to all incoming students.

Cultural events

Our vibrant culture at McGill is made together. Stay connected with the Indigenous knowledge lecture series, pipe ceremonies, workshops, Indigenous Awareness Week, social gatherings and more.

Celebrate your successes, and support each other.

Indigenous graduates participate in a traditional pow-wow, including a Circle of Honour, where they receive ceremonial gifts and are celebrated by the community.

Bring your unique perspective

Indigenous students can have an enriching educational experience in many different programs. Are you interested in a program that forefronts Indigenous issues and perspectives? Follow your passions and apply to the program that's best for you.

Undergraduate studies

At McGill, we face challenges with determination and optimism. With 300+ programs and real-world learning opportunities, the McGill experience will offer new pathways of education and prepare you for a successful career.

Interested in applying? The Indigenous Applicants Protocol encourages admissions decision-makers to take educational experiences that are unique to Indigenous applicants into consideration. It also helps McGill's dedicated Indigenous student recruitment advisor connect with applicants to share more information about support services and funding opportunities.

McGill University is located on land which has long served as a site of meeting and exchange amongst Indigenous peoples, including the Haudenosaunee and Anishinabeg nations. McGill honours, recognizes and respects these nations as the traditional stewards of the lands and waters on which we meet today.

Front cover : On June 21st, National Indigenous Peoples day, McGill raised the Haudenosaunee flag to commemorate the day.

Find support along the way

The Branches team at McGill is committed to being a reliable partner in co-creating responsive and sustained relationships with First Nations, Inuit, and Métis youth, families, schools and organizations.

Their mission is to co-build, with Indigenous and McGill partners, transformative mentorship opportunities and networks of support for Indigenous learners to guide their educational paths. If you have any questions, concerns or comments regarding the application process, how to become a student, or just general questions about the University, connect with Branches' Indigenous student recruitment advisor to learn more: indigenousoutreach@mcgill.ca

Indigenous Student Financial Assistance program

To foster First Nations, Métis and Inuit representation, McGill has established a dedicated funding program for Indigenous students. This program is made possible in part by Indspire, an Indigenous-led registered charity that invests in the education of Indigenous people of Canada. There are three types of dedicated financial support available through the program: McGill's Indigenous First-Year Award with Indspire, McGill's Indigenous Bursary with Indspire and the Provost's Indigenous Achievement Award.

All funds raised through Indspire's Building Brighter Futures Program are matched by the federal government, nearly doubling McGill's investment towards Indigenous students. Find out more at mcgill.ca/studentaid/special-funding/indigenous-student-funding
